

Hearing On Mokena Sewer Case Delayed By Change of Venue

The objectors in the Mokena $70,000 sanitary sewer case, won their first skirmish in the battle to defeat the sewer proposition, when a petition signed by J. V. Hall and Frank A. Tooley, asking for a change of venue from the court of County Judge Ralph Austin, was acted upon through the objector's attorney Edward R. Nadelhoffer, on Monday morning of this week, when the case was set for a hearing before Judge Austin at Joliet.

The village legal counsel Schlutz and Rehn objected to a delay, but finally an agreement was reached that the Honorable Henry F. Ruel, County Judge of Kankakee County, be called and designated to hear said cause, and the case was continued for two weeks, until Monday March 2nd, at 9:30 a.m. in the Will County Court, Joliet.

Judge Austin, before announcing continuance of the case, had asked if any one was present who wished to object but who was not represented by legal counsel. Father, Elmer Bachman, pastor of St. Mary's Catholic church in Mokena, arose and said he had objection, and had no counsel. Judge Austin asked him what his objection were and the priest replied, he "did not see why the property of his church should be assessed." Judge Austin stated church property cannot be taxed, but can be assessed. He then asked the priest whom he would like to have represent him, and he said he would like to have the same attorney the Mokena objectors have.

As the court did not convene attorney Nadelhoffer, representing the objectors of Mokena, did not make any remarks to the court. He discussed the matter of the church assessment with the priest and found that the St. Mary's hall, cemetery and church properties had been assessed $1,000, which the priest says would be very burdensome to his parish.

The objectors have had their side strengthened by a number of new developments in their favor, among which is the entry of the Rock Island Railroad, who has turned the case over to their attorney Wm. D. Heise of Joliet. It is understood. All in all the proponents of the sewer project are facing one of the stiffest legal battles they have ever had a part in.

Feeling against the sewer project is running high, and the people are ready to go to the limit to knock the project out completely.

The Mokena Local Board of Improvements and the Village Board was represented at Monday's meeting in Joliet, by Mayor Harry P. Mall, and Alderman Albert Braun.

A question has arisen as to whether or not the Mokena Methodist and Immanuel Lutheran church properties can be legally assessed, as these edifices stand on ground donated for the use of church and school purposes by the village and therefore the ground is public property.

Special Assessment Hits Cook County

An epidemic of special assessment is evidently hitting many Cook County towns and the tax payers are groaning under the burden and are forced to lose their homes and property in many cases. In Harvey, this matter is being made a campaign issue with the cry: "Do we want any more Special Assessments? No." A million dollar sewer is the big bone of contention in Harvey. Candidates are expressing themselves against special assessments. Matt Stobbs, candidate for mayor makes this vital statement: "I will vote for no special assessment, except one wanted by and asked for by the property owners who will have to pay for it."

In Midlothian there is also an aversion to special assessments and here is a very significant statement made by Frank Meade, President of the Midlothian Goodfellowship Club which all taxpayers in Mokena especially should read and consider deeply.

TO THE ELECTORS OF MIDLOTHIAN:

In order to make clear to the electors of Midlothian our objection to the over lapping assessments levied by the members of the Village Board elected by the Conservative Party, it may be well to explain briefly some of the out standing features of Special Assessments.

First permit me to correct an error in last week's letter. The incorporation of the village was sponsored by the Midlothian Development Association and I wrote it so, but evidently Uncle Casey thought the word was Devilment and appropriated it for his own column.

The State law vests in village boards the power to MAKE local improvements and to pay for the same by special assessment on the property benefited by the improvement. (I have capitalized "make" for reasons I will explain in another letter.)

The levying of a special assessment is rather an intricate and technical proceeding and for that reason it is an expensive way to put in improvements, although it is the only way for a village or city to secure needed improvements.

The village board, acting as a Board of Local Improvements decides what improvements are required. The law does not require that the owners of the property to be assessed shall first request the improvement. After the village Board has passed an ordinance for the improvement and the assessment, the law requires a public hearing after at least five days notice to the owners of the property to be assessed. The Board has power to proceed with the proposed improvement and assessment regardless of what the expressed wishes of the property owners may be. The ordinance is then filed in court after publication in a newspaper and the property owners have an opportunity to file objections and to a hearing thereon. After the court has confirmed the assessment and determined into how many annual installments the assessment shall be divided, the village Board publishes an advertisement for bids and awards the contract for the work. To anticipate the collection of the assessment, the village issues Special Assessment Bonds which are not obligation of the village but are payable solely from the assessment when collected. These bonds are in effect a first mortgage on the property assessed. If successive assessments are levied before the prior one is paid, the bonds become second, third, or fourth mortgages. The law requires the contractor to accept these bonds at their face value in payment of his contract. In normal times the first mortgage bonds have a market value of about ninety or ninety-five cents on the dollar; the second mortgage bonds of about seventy; and subsequent bonds of fifty cents or less. Contractors who bid on special assessment work must of necessity inquire as to the market value of the bonds since they are paid in bonds at their face value; and he must add to his bid enough to cover the discount on the bonds.

If I have made clear to you the loss forced upon property owners by successive special assessments, you will be prepared to grasp at what the conservative party in its administration of the affairs of this village tried to do and would have done but for the protection given by the Peoples Party and the Midlothian Goodfellowship Club. These assessments will be listed in next week's letter.

Yes, we have fought your battles against useless improvements in this openly and fairly.

The Peoples Party is a fighting party. Fighting openly and fairly for honestly in village government.

We ask your consideration of this ticket: Richard J. White for President, Eric Burns, Kenneth Sidel and Fred C. Kasten, trustees, and Peter J. Johnson for Police Magistrate.

Respectfully,
FRANK MEAD,
President of Midlothian Goodfellowship Club.

Frankfort Man Robbed Of Car

Erwin Block of Frankfort was robbed of his car and $12 cash Sunday evening in Joliet on Park road in front of the home of James Walsh taking his large new Buick deluxe sedan. Three bandits dressed in the latest style, needed a larger car so they traded and left a light car of the same make which was later found to belong to someone else, so Mr. Block got nothing in the trade.

Surrounding him as he stepped from his car the bandits announced to Mr. Block "It was a stick-up." They made him show them how to operate the car, then ordered him out. All three had black coats and black hats and according to Mr. Block they were dressed in the latest fashion. The license on the light car which they left was issued to Joseph Jaros, 346 Robinson avenue for a Buick. However the car belonged to A. B. Grigsby, 9940 Calumet avenue, Chicago, according to papers found in the pocket. Mr. Block purchased this car only a short time ago.

From the time the first fire was started it was 35 seconds until the fire was out. The Tinley Park Lions Club old time Minstrel show presented at the Saenger hall in Tinley Park on last Thursday and Friday nights was a roaring success. Capacity houses were noted each night and the show made a great hit.

The Lions want to thank Tony Kososki and his orchestra who were: Edmund Moss, Bud Mattioda, Walter Goebel, Wm. Stockman, Ruth Funk, Edwin Hug, Also W. A. Ward who acted as the director of the Minstrel. Others taking part were: Tamourines; Clyde Rice, Robert L. Kooker, Fred Goebel, Arthur Schoeneck. Bones: Hilding Anderson, Ernie Anderson, A. O. Foskett and Selby Hirsch.

Song Birds were: Rudolph Detwiler, John Andres, Homer Snodgrass, Harold Berg, Harry A. Mager and Frank Mancke.

The specialty acts in the show was surely fine. Fred Goebel surprised all with his acrobatic stunts, aided by Clyde Rice and Ernst Anderson. Dr. R. H. Carmichael scored a big hit with his ventriloquist stunts. The short sketch by Dr. Carmichael and Selby Hirsch was fine but too short. Was sorry Art Schoeneck stopped with his jiggling. It was very good and last but not least, the quartette singing was the finishing touch.

The Baritone, Alexander Corado, formerly of the State Opera, Berlin, Germany, who sang, "Deep River" and "O, Du Mein Holden Abendstern", was wonderful we thank him and also Mr. Ward for his solo, and for all who helped in any way.

There was quite a delegation from the Chicago Heights and Midlothian Lions Club. It was greatly appreciated the Black Face stunt which the Chicago Heights members put on. The Lions also appreciate the use of the chairs from the Legion and the help from the P. T. A. The Triangle club and the public for attending.

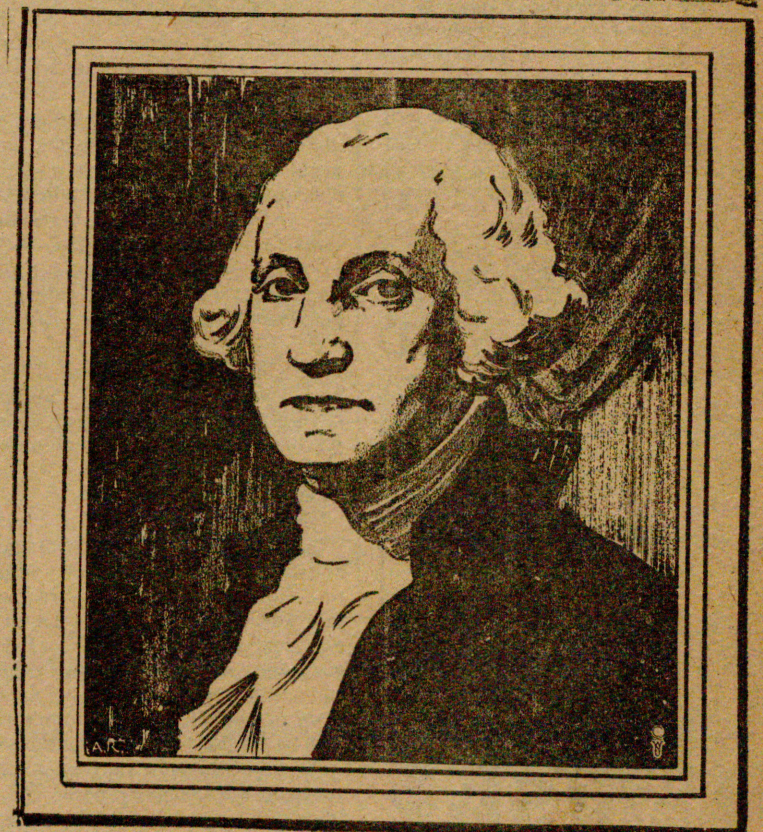

The Chicago Tribune sent out a photographer who took several "shots" of the cast after the Friday evening performance.

All the proceeds which was $348.00, are to be used for public benefit. Whenever the Tinley Park Lions put on a program, it is sure to go over with a roar. They have the talent and the pep to make things go over in a big way.

The minstrel show was something out of the ordinary and was packed full of fun and laughter from the first opening note to the close.

Sleep finally assuaged the sorrow of a giant tortoise in the London zoo for its dead mate. For several weeks following the death of its companion the lumbering reptile constantly made the rounds of the tortoise house searching for her. A. D. Rodenberg, a member of the state tax commission, was found dead in his room at the Great Northern hotel, Chicago, February 4. He had been in the city to meet Omer N. Custer, chairman of the commission, registering at the hotel the day previous. Hotel attaches forced the door when he had not responded to calls. Death was attributed to heart ailment. Mr. Rodenberg had been appointed to the tax commission January 14. Previously he had served as an assistant attorney general under Edward J. Brundage and Oscar E. Carlstrom, and had been prominent in politics in the state for years. He was fifty-two years of age.

Director John G. Millhouse, of the department of mines and minerals, reports that there were no major mine disasters in the state of Illinois during the year 1930. The receipts for the 1930 gas tax amounted to $28,612,268.66, according to a statement issued by Director Garrett DeF. Kinney, of the finance department of Illinois. July and August were the peak months of the year in collections. One-third of this sum, less costs of collection and administration, will be allotted to the counties of the state in proportion to the amount of automobile licenses paid by that county. This money is to be used to improve their highways under state supervision.

Bids on 110.89 miles of new state paving were opened recently and the average cost per mile including cement will be $24,753. Director H. H. Cleveland addressed the contractors before the bids were opened and stressed the fact that the successful bidders must hire men in the locality where they are working if such men are available, and the prevailing wage of that section must be paid. "I do not mean distress wages. I mean a fair rate of wages," Director Cleveland said. It is the intention of the department to check on the work and see that its orders are being obeyed.

The fifty-sixth general assembly appropriated $600,000 for the procuring of an artillery range in connection with Camp Grant, for the use of the state National Guard. This money has not been expended, but Adjutant General Carlos E. Black reports that options have been taken on 4,300 acres of land at an average price of $144 per acre, purchase of which is to be approved by the governor and the committee. Since the meeting of the present general assembly, Representative Leroy Green, of Rockford, has offered a resolution to allow the appropriation to lapse and the funds thus saved to the state to be used for the erection of armories in various cities, bills for which have already been introduced. The committee on appropriations by a vote of 21 to 7 has reported out the resolution with favorable recommendation.

JESUS BEARING THE GOOD TIDINGS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 9:1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT—And it came to pass afterward, that he went throughout every city and village, preaching and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God: and the twelve were with him.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Teaching About God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Teaching About God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—"Take Heed How Ye Hear."

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Cultivate an Honest and Good Heart.

I. The Field of Jesus' Ministry (v. 1.)

"He went throughout every city and village." It is the will of God that the gospel should be preached to the whole world.

II. The Message of Jesus (v. 1.)

The gospel message is truly good tidings, for God the Great King is offering to rebellious sinners salvation through Jesus Christ.

III. Jesus' Helpers (v. 1.)

The twelve apostles were with him. The gospel preacher should utilize the help of others. Those who have heard the good tidings of the gospel gladly join in preaching it to others.

IV. Jesus Supported by Saved Women (vv. 2, 3.)

Certain women who had been saved from Satan's power, out of hearts of gratitude looked after the comfort of the Lord and his disciples. This throws light on how Christ and the apostles were supported.

V. Jesus Teaching (v. 4-21.)

Jesus was not only a gospel preacher but a great teacher. When the people from every city gathered unto Him, He taught them.

1. By the Parable of the Sower (vv. 4-15). (1) The sower was Jesus himself (Matt. 13:37). (2) The seed was the Word of God (v. 11). (3) The kinds of ground (vv. 5-15).

The kinds of ground show the condition of the human heart as the Word of God is preached.

a. The wayside (v. 5). The foot-trodden path of the wayside pictures the hard-hearted hearers upon which no impression can be made. The word preached finds no entrance and Satan snatches it away as the birds pick up the grain from the hard-beaten path.

b. Stony ground (v. 6). This is not ground where stones are mixed with the earth, but a thin layer of earth in a ledge of rock. This pictures the hearer who receives the gospel with joy, but when persecutions and trials come, he gives up and deserts the company (v. 15).

c. Thorny ground (v. 7). The ground here is good, but it has thorns growing in it. This pictures those whose lives are fruitless because of being preoccupied with earthly cares, riches, and the pleasures of life (v. 14).

d. The good ground (v. 8). The seed here sprang up and bore fruit to the full measure. This is a picture of the honest heart which receives the gospel message and allows it to produce in its life a full harvest of grain (v. 15).

2. By the lighted candle (vv. 16-18). The Word of God is compared to a lamp or lighted candle. A lamp is of use only as it sends out light. One who hears God's Word and does not witness for Christ is as a lamp covered up.

3. Kinship with Jesus Christ (vv. 19, 20). Only those who receive the message of God's Word and render glad obedience to it can claim relationship with Christ.

VI. Jesus Performing Wonders (vv. 22-40.)

1. Calming the storm (vv. 22-25). Jesus fell asleep while the disciples were sailing the ship. They were overtaken by an unusual storm and were affrighted. In response to their cry of distress Jesus arose and rebuked the storm, and likewise the disciples.

2. Casting out demons (vv. 26-30). When Jesus came into the country of the Gadarenes he was met by a demon-possessed man. Knowing their doom, the demons requested permission to enter a herd of swine. Jesus granted their request, after which the herd ran violently down a steep place into the lake. The effect upon the people was such that they besought Jesus to depart from them. The salvation of this man from demon possession ought to have awakened gratitude on the part of the people. The delivered man desired to be with the Lord. His request was refused because it was more important for him to make known to his friends at home the great deliverance which had come to him.

Only One Deliverer

No one into whose soul the iron of sin's bondage has entered can free either himself or others. Our emancipator must be one who is in fullest, uninterrupted communion with the Father, and comes, armed with his power, to break every yoke and bring liberty to the captives.—Alexander McLaren.

God Weighs Men

God is not counting men these days; He is weighing them.—Joseph Parker.

IMMANUEL LUTH. CHURCH
Paul E. Schauer, Pastor

A German service will be conducted by the Pastor of Immanuel Lutheran church, Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock. Sunday school will meet at 9:30 o'clock. Come thou with us and we will do thee good.

A midweek Lenten service will be held every Wednesday evening at 7:45 o'clock in Immanuel Lutheran church by the pastor. On Feb. 25th a German service will be conducted. There are various methods of observing Lent. They usually consist in the abstaining from some luxury, or in the curtailment of amusements and pleasures. These customs have a certain worth and significance and ought to be encouraged. But a far better way of observing the Lenten season is by going to our church to hear the message of the Redeemer's suffering and death. Every one bring some one else, that they too may hear of man's sin and God's love and grace.

MOKENA METHODIST CHURCH

"A growing church in a growing community"

The Lenten season calls us to give our lives with renewed energy to the work of the Kingdom. Easter will mean more to us if we attend church regularly during this season.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

Commission Says "No Discrimination"

February 14, 1931.
Mr. Roy G. Andrews,
Midlothian Messenger,
Midlothian, Illinois.
My Dear Mr. Andrews:

Your letter of February 7 to the Governor's Commission has been handed to the undersigned. All funds contributed in the Cook County Emergency Campaign are being distributed to established relief organizations so far as possible. In a few cases in suburban communities it has been necessary for us to make distributions through committees organized especially for the emergency. In Chicago, family relief is distributed almost wholly through our four major family relief organizations, the United Charities, the Catholic Charities, the Jewish Charities and the Salvation Army. The special work fund is a cooperative measure to help some of the families dependent upon these relief organizations. Only such heads of families as are approved by these organizations refer to the fund only their most needy cases.

Some of the smaller organizations in Chicago which are receiving relief funds from the Governor's Commission also use part of these funds to pay for work given instead of relief, and a number of suburban organizations to which the Governor's Commission is contributing are also doing the same thing. This is a good method of giving relief and is approved by the Governor's Commission.

You will see from the above that there is no discrimination against people in need of relief living in suburban communities. We have made appropriations to twenty suburban relief organizations or committees and the aggregate so appropriated will amount to more than $125,000.00. Some of this will be used in the form of wages for special work rather than in direct relief. It should be emphasized, however, that this is purely a relief measure.

Very truly yours,
FRANK D. LOOMIS, Sec'y
Budget Com.

How he rescued an unconscious observer from a storm tossed balloon run up from the deck of the convoy cruiser Huntington in the war zone in 1917, is to be related this week when Patrick McGuinal, Medal of Honor man, is heard in the "Chevrolet Chronicles" hour over stations as shown above.

The balloon, on submarine lookout duty, was 500 feet above the deck of the cruiser, when sudden storm struck it, ripped loose one of four supporting ropes and hammered the crazily tossing bag repeatedly into the sea and against the masts of the cruiser, while the observer was tarped in the basket by a maze of snarled ropes.

When the shapeless mass came close to the deck McGuinal leaped into the tangle of ropes and although lofted high in the air again, succeeded in holding fast to the observer, extricating him from the ropes and slipping a bowline around him so that he could be pulled to safety. For his heroic deed McGuinal, who resides at Montauk, N. Y., won the Medal of Honor, highest government award for naval men. He also was awarded the War Cross of Italy.

Frazier Hunt, international journalistic figure, will interview McGuinal for the radio audience, and a musical program directed by Frank Black and Gustave Haenschen will round out the half-hour program presented weekly over this station by local Chevrolet dealers.

Bremen Township Health Topics

Eleanor Gallagher, R. N.
Rural Nursing Service of Cook Co.

We have just finished the physical examination of the children in the Midlothian public school and thought it would be of interest to the parents to know the findings. There were 390 children examined and of this number 171 had defective teeth, 50 had enlarged tonsils and 21 had defective vision. We have not checked the vaccination status exactly but at a rough estimate there are not more than 50 per cent of all those children vaccinated against small pox and even a smaller number are immunized against diphtheria.

These findings do not make a very good foundation for health building, and with 21 children in a school with impaired vision it will be somewhat difficult for teachers to bring these children up to the grade they should naturally make. We hope the parents will think this matter over and do what they can to correct it.

There has been some rumor of mumps in a number of our schools but so far we have found this to be a mistake. There has been a lot of "flu" and many of the cases have swollen glands. This in some instances has been taken for mumps as it does look very much like it. We hope the parents will watch their children carefully and report any contagion promptly so it can be isolated and kept from spreading. So far this season we have had a very good record and would like to keep it.

HUGE TELEPHONE PLANTS PLANNED FOR SKYSCRAPERS

Almost Entire Floor in One Building to House Single Exchange

Telephone engineers in New York City are being kept busy these days in making plans for the installation of cable in a large number of skyscrapers now being erected on Manhattan Island. In particular, six of these new skyscrapers have entailed considerable work.

One of these new buildings is the New Yorker Hotel recently completed at Eighth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street. Nearly two miles of cable of all sizes were used in this hotel which has 2,600 telephones served through a 24 position private branch exchange with a capacity of 3,000 lines and with 140 central office trunks.

Then, there is also the new 70-story Bank of Manhattan building on Wall Street which is now being erected and which will require about 4,450 feet of cable, containing some 2,600 miles of conductor wire. It is estimated that the structure, when completed, will contain 3,200 telephones. There are also the 26-story Board of Trade building at 370 Lexington Avenue, the 43-story Lefcourt Colonial building at 295-7 Madison Avenue, the 36-story Daily News Building on Forty-second Street, and the 73-story Chrysler building on Lexington Avenue. These structures will require about 2,550 feet of subsidiary block cable and about 6,550 feet of house cable, varying in size from 1/2 to 1 1/2 inch.

A single dial private branch exchange will serve the communication needs of the National City Bank, the National City Company, and the City Bank-Farmers Trust Company upon the completion of the new building to be erected in the financial district bounded by Exchange Place, William, Hanover and Beaver Streets. The ultimate capacity of this board will be about 7,000 lines, and almost an entire floor of the new building will be required to house it. It is expected that the building will be completed for occupancy by January 1, 1931, at which time the telephone equipment must be ready for service.

DETROIT'S FIRST PHONE AGAIN IN SERVICE

The first telephone ever installed in the City of Detroit has been on the retired list for many years, but it returned to active service in March when David M. Gray, Vice-President and Secretary of Frederick Stearns & Company, spoke over the ancient instrument with Frederick Sweet Stearns, Chairman of the Board of the Stearns concern, who was at Miami Beach, Fla.

It was in the Frederick Stearns drug store that this telephone, the first in Detroit, was installed in 1877. It was one of the very first commercial instruments in history, and now reposes in the Bell Telephone Laboratories Museum in New York City. It is the magnetic type of instrument in which the same aperture serves both for listening and speaking.

When this instrument was built, the longest distance that had been spanned by the human voice was only a few miles, but in 1930, the same instrument was able to talk approximately 1,155 miles from Michigan to Florida. The clearness with which this conversation was carried on served anew to point to the fact that the great improvements in telephony in the past fifty years have been largely improvements involving problems of transmission.

Does Mother Know Best?

Which is stronger, a Mother's 'will' or a daughter's 'wont'?

This question will be answered tonight by the Midlothian Drama Club in its play, "The Conflict". The cast consists of Louise Jage, Frances Holmes, Alberta Van Meerten and Harry Nichols.

Another play "The Right Answer" will also be presented.

Both plays were well attended last night and a banner crowd is expected tonight.

The proceeds of the play will go toward expenses for the new stage which was constructed for these plays.

The two casts, the club officers and the members of the various committees surprised Rev. Bosley with an "after-theatre" dinner in honor of his birthday which coincidentally was Thursday. The tables were decorated in black and gold—Rev. Bosley's school colors. Participants in the repast state that the occasion was one of delightful "informal formality."

Thieves Busy But Fail to Get Loot

Light fixtures were found piled by the doors of two vacant houses Sunday morning; thieves had taken them down but were prevented from moving them by some unknown cause. The houses are on Turner ave., between 146th and 147th sts.

Confirmation Lacking on District Committeeman

A signed report was printed in the MESSENGER some few weeks ago that a certain individual had been recognized as Democratic district committeeman from Bremen. The correctness of this statement was challenged and the editor took up the matter with a member of the Central Committee.

He informs us that two men, John Clarke and John Orgel, are mailed notices of meetings of the committee, but that official confirmation of either has not yet been made. The same situation, we are told, exists in Worth township and in Evanston.

TO OUR NEIGHBORS

Each person consists of two parts, body and soul. To supply the needs of the body our community boasts of stores offering food, clothing, shoes, meat, drink, etc. You are acquainted with them, you know what they have to offer, you trade there, and thus supply your bodily wants.

Your soul needs attention also, even more so than your body, for the body perishes, the soul does not, it is immortal.

Concordia Lutheran church has been established to supply the needs of the soul. It is the aim of Concordia Church to serve our community only in this line, and we therefore call attention to what we offer for the soul.

We are only in one business, and that is to save souls, and there is only one way of doing that, that is God's way, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." We therefore teach and preach nothing but the Bible, but the whole Bible. This is all we offer, it is our only talking point, not politics, not a pretentious church building, not a man-made religion, not a wonderful choir or organ, only and simply this, "We preach Christ and Him crucified."

We offer this by divine services at 10:45 A. M.; through the Sunday School; by means of training and confirmation classes; by means of adult membership classes, etc.

We have various organizations in our midst. These are in a thriving condition and offer true Christian sociability. But they are merely adjuncts to our work and not the main thing. Our business is first, last, and all the time to preach and teach the Gospel according to Christ's instructions and thus bring the soul to the place of safety in the arms of the Savior here in time and hereafter in eternity.

If you have been interested enough to read this open letter thus far, you will know all about Concordia Church and its business. If you have no Church Home and are not connected with another Church, we respectfully and cordially invite you to come and worship with us, and enroll the little ones in our Sunday school.

Yours, for the welfare of your soul, and therefore for the community.

Respectfully,
Rev. E. T. Blau,
Pastor of Concordia Lutheran Church, 148th Pl. & Hamlin Ave.

Chinese "Number Please" Is "Day Huey Bin She Ah"

These Chinese Operators Have Long Records

THREE of the veteran operators of the Chinatown telephone exchange of San Francisco were recently honored for their long service by the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company. They are Mrs. Rose Mock, Mrs. Grace Wong and Mrs. Nellie Jow. Mrs. Wong has had twenty years of service, and Mrs. Jow has been on duty for fifteen years, and Mrs. Mock for ten, and they have been awarded service emblems corresponding to their length of service.

Mrs. Wong is reputed to know everybody in the Chinese colony of San Francisco, and since many of the customers who use the Chinese telephone exchange are not very adept with Arabic numerals, they ask Mrs. Wong for their calls by name instead of by number, and Mrs. Wong immediately connects them. To her, telephone numbers are just a formality required by the telephone company.

It so happens that the manager of the exchange, Mr. Loo Kern, is only twenty-three years old and he has recently taken the place of his father, Loo Kum Shu, who was founder and manager of the Chinatown exchange, and served for thirty-two years in that capacity. His son was master of ceremonies at the presentation of the service emblems.

TELEPHONE OPERATOR CALLED FIRE HEROINE

Quick action on the part of a night operator at the Grotto, Vt., telephone exchange, by spreading the alarm of a fire which had started in the drugstore on the Main Street of the town, resulted in the saving of a woman and her five small children from the flames.

Mrs. W. W. Pillsbury, the operator, as soon as she was notified of the fire, telephoned to the central fire headquarters and aroused scores of call firemen, who in turn, were responsible for the rescue of Mrs. Henderson and her five small children who were trapped on the third floor of the three-story wooden building.

Mrs. Pillsbury was aware that the children were ill, and when she called the firemen she notified them of their location on the third floor.

Town officials, as well as police and fire authorities, said that Mrs. Pillsbury was the real heroine of the blaze.

Faced with a shortage of telephones, the Moscow Russian Soviet has rationed not more than one instrument to a floor, in an effort to have telephone service as generally available as their facilities permit.

Glorious Contemplation

An English parliamentary candidate wound up a frenzied oration as follows: "Gentlemen, the glorious victory which will swamp our opponents when the eye of the election dawns upon us will re-echo in words of gold through the corridors of time, until the last grand trump shall sound through the valleys of the mountains."

Signaling by Drums

In South Africa messages are signaled by means of drums made of bark, theappings on which can be heard many miles away. It is by this method that the defeat of Sir Redvers Buller at Colenso was made known to natives 60 miles distant in the space of two hours.

Nobody Loves a Policeman

That's an old saying but it isn't true any more. At least, it hasn't been true since F. O. Alexander added "Finney of the Force" to the list of famous comic strip characters. For "Finney", with his twinkling humor and his shrewd comment on people and the common everyday events of life, is a lovable character, as thousands of newspaper readers who have followed him through his various adventures will testify. "Finney of the Force" is a regular feature in this newspaper with whom our subscribers are acquainted, and all enjoy him. Then tell your friends about him, for they will enjoy him as much as you do.

The Mud of Midlothian

It is suggested since he has entered the bakery business that Fetter's the Fixer change his title to Fetter's the Mixer.

Some there are who, do what they may, cannot stay out of the Mud. Such is Clara Moore, Educator, Milkman and Lion, who through half a column of the B. I. Suburban-Star was referred to as Clara Moore.

Then there is the Posen youngster who, to the examination question - What part of a foot is an inch? - Answered "A toe". And to - What part of a foot is seven inches? - answered, "An ankle".

To those in the Gardens who have blamed the new pump for the weird sound heard early every morning on 44th Avenue and on 148th Street Uncle Casey announces after diligent excavation that it is due to Helen Mostyn, whistling on her way to the station.

What the whistling is due to we hope to announce in the near future.

It had been intended to write a brief sketch of Markham, its why, wherefore and what to do with it, for this issue of the Mud but after much thought Uncle Casey has decided that all that can be said is: Markham is a village where the residents have Blue Island telephone numbers, get their mail on a Harvey R. F. D., and tell Chicagoans they live in Midlothian.

Dear Uncle Casey:

Do you realize that this week's "Mud" was almost half water (count the lines) and besides you used only Gardens water. Better use some of Robertson's water now and then or the Gardens Water board will shut off Ye Editor's water for using so much. What's the matter with that Gardens board anyway, they went and put in a iron pump and now the water's got iron in it; with the old pump we only had air. Maybe we got iron men on that board, maybe they are all rusty, maybe they will rust out! What kind of water do you think we'll get then?

A group of five men from Midlothian and Oak Forest have formed a team called "The Mid-Oak Match Bowlers". It is composed of the following: Novak, Abrahams, Tscheulin, Sheehan, and Lange.

On Sunday they played the North American Car Corporation in Blue Island with two series of three games each, splitting even, on the series but leading their opponents by a total of 26 pins for both series.

An interesting affair is being planned between the Mid-Oak team and the American Legion team for an evening next week.

Mrs. Frank Lilly returned home from the Lewis Memorial hospital with her new daughter last Friday.

Each room of the Midlothian school had a Valentine party Friday afternoon. Miss McNellis, the 6th grade teacher received the surprise of her life when her youngsters presented her with an enormous red heart filled with chocolates. This gift plainly showed that the youngsters are appreciative of her earnest and sincere efforts in trying to be a real teacher.

With the large financial resources of this organization they are able to name their own terms on large purchases. They know quality and make a continual study of the territory they serve, making their buying highly efficient.

His personal attention to the needs of his customers is in no small measure responsible for the growth of business within this mercantile establishment. The Plains of Abraham

By James Oliver Curwood

© by Doubleday Doran Co., Inc.
WNU Service.

It was the testimony of the late James Oliver Curwood that there was more fact than fiction in this novel; that the heroine, Marie Antoinette Tonteur, and her fierce old father lived and loved as described in the story; that Catherine Bulain and her valiant son were flesh and blood of their day; that Tlaoga, Shindas, Silver Heels and several other of the more important characters were not creatures of fancy; that "The Plains of Abraham," like his other tale, "The Black Hunter," to which it is closely related, is largely a romance of life as it was lived and not as it might have been lived.

The author also asserted that the gathering of the material had been the most thrilling adventure of his life; the traveling foot by foot over the hallowed ground, the reading of letters written by hands dead a hundred and fifty years or more, the dreaming over yellow manuscripts written by priests and martyrs and, lastly, the unveiling of loves and hates and tragedies and happiness of the almost forgotten period embracing the very birth of both the American and Canadian peoples, and weighted with happenings that shook the foremost nations of the earth and largely made them what they are today.

The story passes through romances, adventures and other stirring phases of life in the Champlain and Richelieu regions and reaches its finale on the Plains of Abraham at Quebec, in that historic struggle which marked the ambitions of the French, established the ascendancy of the English and drew the first crude boundaries of the future United States and Canada.

CHAPTER I

On a sunny afternoon in May, 1749, a dog, a boy, a man, and a woman had crossed the oak opens of Tonteur's hill and were trailing toward the deeper wilderness of the French frontier westward of the Richelieu and Lake Champlain—the dog first, the boy following, the man next, and the woman last.

It was a reversal of proper form. Tonteur had growled as he watched them go. A fool's way of facing a savage-infested country that had no end. The man should have marched at the head of his precious column with his long gun ready and his questioning eyes alert; the woman next, to watch and guard with him; then the boy and the dog, if such nuisances were to be tolerated in travel of this kind, with evening coming on.

Tonteur was the one-legged warrior seigneur from whose gristmill down in the valley the four were going home.

His eyes had followed the woman with a subdued and appraising hunger in them. Henri Bulain was a strange man, he had thought. He might be a little crazy, might even be a fool. But he was also a very lucky husband to possess a woman with the sweet face and form and the divinely chaste heart of Catherine, his wife.

Jeems was a fortunate boy to have her for a mother.

Even the dog was a scoundrel for luck. An Indian dog at that. A sneaking, good-for-nothing dog. A wreck of a dog without a soul, to be fed by her, petted by her, smiled at by her—as he had seen her smile.

Tonteur was first of the long string of heroic fighting barons settled by France along the Richelieu to hold the English and their red barbarians back. He was Doorkeeper to the waterway that led straight to the heart of New France. If the English came with their scalping fiends, the Mohawks and the Senecas, they would have to pass over him first of all. No general could be given greater distinction than that. Honor. Wealth. A wide domain over which he was king. And yet—

He envied Henri Bulain.

It was midafternoon. Maytime shadows were growing longer toward the east. It was the hour when birds were singing softly. Morning had heard their defiance, a glorious and fearless challenge of feathered minstrelsy to all the spirits of darkness; but with late afternoon, sunset, evening, these same slim-throated songsters found a note of gratitude and of prayer in their chastened voices. Flowers crushed underfoot. In the open spaces they carpeted the earth with white and pink and blue. Flowers and birds and peace—a world filled with a declining sun—a smiling heaven of blue over the treetops—and with them a dog, a boy, a man, and a woman advancing westward.

Three of these, even the dog, Tonteur envied.

This dog had a name which fitted him, Tonteur had thought. For he was a wreck of a dog—even more a wreck than the splendid seigneur himself, with his stub of a shot-off leg and a breast that bore sword marks which would have killed an ordinary man. The dog, first of all, was a homely dog, so hopelessly homely that one could not help loving him at sight. His hair was bristly and unkempt. His paws huge. His tail was half gone, which left him only a stub to wag. He walked with a limp, a heavy, never-failing limp that seemed to shake his long body from end to end, for his left fore paw—like Tonteur's foot—was missing. A crooked, cheery, inartistic, lovable dog to whom the woman—in a moment's visioning of the fitness of things—had given the name of Odds-and-Ends.

So Tonteur was half right in thinking of him as a wreck of a dog, but in one other thing he was wrong. The dog did have a soul—a soul that belonged to the boy, his master. That soul had a great scar seared upon it by hunger and abuse in an Indian camp where Henri Bulain had found him four years before, and from which, out of pity for a dying creature, he had taken him home to Jeems. It was a scar cut deep by clubs and kicks, a wound that had never healed and that made the dog what he was—a tireless and suspicious hunter of scents and sounds in the woods.

Of the four who were filing westward, he seemed to be the only one who watched and listened for danger to come out of the beauty and stillness of the world about them. Now and then he glanced up at his master. Trouble lay in the boy's face and eyes, and the dog sensed it after a little and whined in a questioning way in his throat.

Daniel James Bulain was the boy's name, but from babyhood his mother had called him Jeems. He was twelve and weighed twenty pounds more than his dog. Odds-and-Ends, called Odd for short, weighed sixty, if the scales in Tonteur's gristmill were right. One would have known the dog and the boy belonged together even had they been in a crowd, for if Odd was a battered old warrior, the boy, on the other hand, gave every evidence of an ambition to achieve a similar physical condition.

"Why, he's dressed up like a bold, bad pirate come to abduct my little girl and hold her for ransom," Tonteur had roared, down in the valley, and Jeems' father had joined the baron in his laughter; then, to make the thing worse, Tonteur had turned him round and round, slowly and appraisingly, with lovely little Marie Antoinette looking on, her dainty nose upturned in patrician disdain—and with Paul Tache, her detestable cousin from the great city of Quebec, openly leering and grimacing at him from behind her back. And this after he had prepared himself with painstaking care for Marie Antoinette's eyes should she happen to see him! That was the tragedy of it. He had put on his new doekin suit. He carried a gun which was two inches longer than himself. A big powderhorn swung at his waist, in his belt was a knife, and over his shoulder hung the most treasured of his possessions, a slim ash bow and a quiver filled with arrows. He had worn his coonskin cap of fur in spite of the warmth of the day, because it looked better than the lighter one, which was stripped, and in this cap was a long turkey feather. Odd, the dog, was proud of his martial-looking master, but he could not understand the change that had come over the boy or why he was going home with such a strangely set and solemn face.

From her position behind the dog, the boy, and the man, Catherine Bulain looked upon her world with a joyous and unafraid pride. No boy, in her opinion, could equal Jeems, and no man her husband. One could see and feel her happiness, and as Tonteur secretly built up the fire of his yearning when he was alone, so she loved to exult in her own possessions when her men folk were ahead and could not see all that came and went in her face. This desire to hold within herself some small and sacred part of her rejoicing was because she was English and not French. That was why Daniel James had an English name, inherited from her father, who had been a New England schoolmaster and Maya Indians Have Been "Pioneers" in Corn?

At Quirigua, in the republic of Guatemala, there exists a number of most interesting ruins, apparently the remains of temples and other public buildings. There are many individual monoliths, erected as monuments of different sorts, sculptured with human faces and figures and animal designs, as well as hieroglyphics, which archeologists have not as yet been able to decipher accurately. One such stone bears a date in Mayan chronology which has been computed to coincide with 535 A. D. of the Gregorian calendar. The carving of this monolith, which is the largest of the surviving remnants, is still clear and perfect, despite the long procession of centuries that has passed over it. Inscriptions and representations on this and other stones tend to the belief afterward an agent of the Penns down in Pennsylvania. It was on the frontier of that far province that Henri had found and married her.

Tonteur was aware, possibly even more than Henri Bulain, that Catherine's adoration of her men folk and of everything that went with them, even to the primitive discomforts of the wilderness life which had claimed her, was built up against a background of something more than merely being the mate of a man and the mother of a son. Culture and learning and broadness of vision and thought, nurtured in her first by a gentle mother, and, after her death, developed and strengthened by a schoolmaster father, had given to her a medium of priceless value by which to measure happiness.

Because of her adroitness in fashioning beauty and perfection out of simple and inexpensive things, and also because she was of the spawn of the despicable English, Madame Henriette Tonteur had come to regard her with much the same aversion and dislike with which she would have looked upon a cup of poison.

Tonteur knew this and cursed in his honest heart at the woman who was his wife, with her coldly patrician face, her powdered hair, her jewels and gowns and her platonic ignorance of love—and then thanked his God that little Marie Antoinette was growing less like her with each day that passed over her pretty head. For Marie Antoinette was tempestuous, like himself, a patrician without doubt, but with a warm and ready passion to offset that curse, and for this, too, he blessed the fortune which in one way had been so kind to him.

Behind her husband and boy Catherine had been thinking of Tonteur and of his wife, the aristocratic Henriette. For a long time she had known of Madame Tonteur's hatred, but it was not until this afternoon that the other discovery had come to her, for, in spite of his most heroic efforts, Tonteur had betrayed himself when suddenly she had caught him looking at her. Catherine had seen the shadow of his secret—like a ghost swiftly disappearing. Up over the hill she had added many twos and twos together, until, in the sure way of a woman, she knew what Tonteur was thinking and did not fear or distrust him for it.

And Madame Tonteur hated her. Disbelieving whatever good might have been said of Catherine, she hated her first as a deadly enemy of her race, and hated her then because she dared hold her head as proudly as a baron's lady, and hated her last of all because, nothing more than the wife of a worthless backwoodsman like Henri Bulain, she was impudent enough to be the prettiest woman anywhere near the Tonteur seigneurie.

And, so far as it was in her power, she had planted and nurtured this hatred to growth in the heart and mind of her proud daughter, Marie Antoinette, until Tonteur, blind to the feline subtlety of a woman in such matters, wondered why it was that his girl, whom he worshiped above all other things on earth, should so openly display unfriendliness and dislike whenever Jeems came to Tonteur manor.

Of this same thing Jeems had been thinking as he walked ahead of his father and mother. His mind, at present, was busy with the stress of fighting. Mentally, and physically in a way, he was experiencing the thrill of sanguinary battle. Half a dozen times since beginning the long climb over Tonteur's hill he had choked and beaten Paul Tache, and in every moment of these mental triumphs Marie Antoinette looked on with wonder and horror as he pitilessly assailed and vanquished her handsome young cousin from the big city of Quebec.

Even in the heat of these vivid imaginings Jeems was sick at heart, and it was the shadow of this sickness which Odd caught when he looked up into his master's eyes.

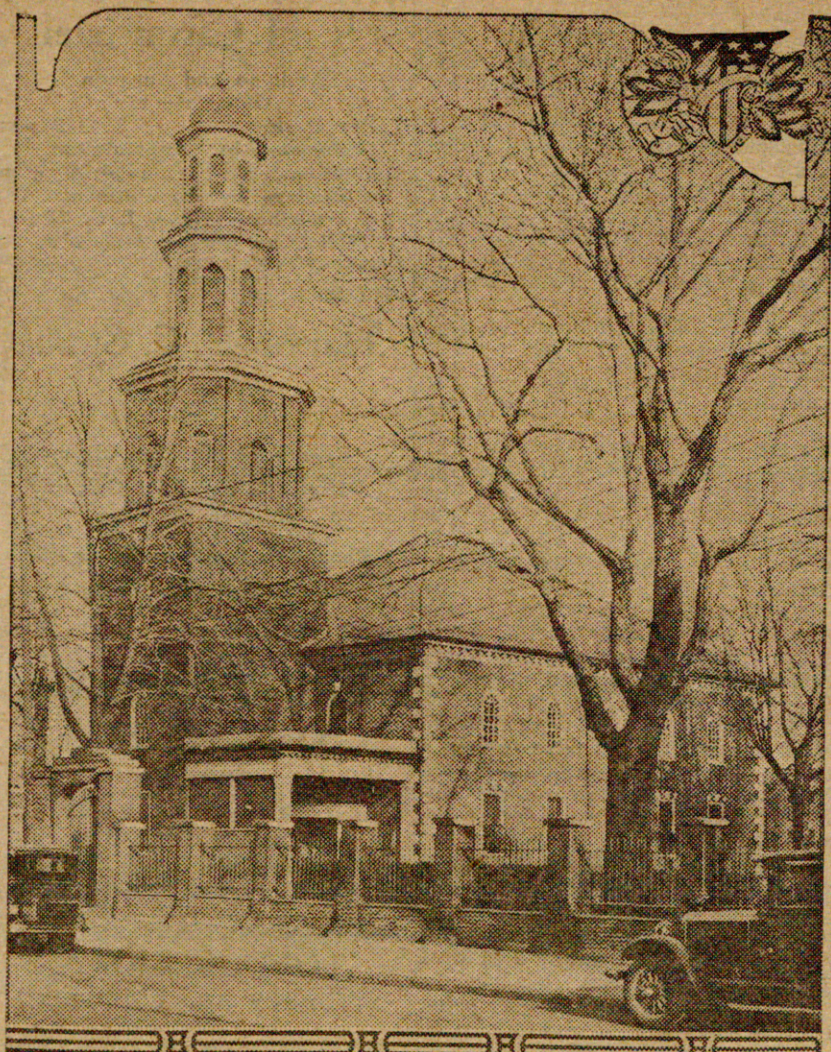

From the day Jeems had first seen Marie Antoinette, when she was seven and he was nine, he had dreamed of her, and had anticipated through weeks and months the journeys which his father permitted him to make with him to Tonteur manor. On these rare occasions he had gazed with childish adoration at the little princess of the seigneurie and had made her presents of flowers and feathers and nuts and maple sugar and queer treasures which he brought from the forests. These tokens of his homage had never served to build a bridge across the abyss which lay between them.

Seedless Oranges

The original seedless oranges were produced in Brazil by means of budding and the orange trees of this type in the United States all descended from two imported Brazilian trees. Buds or budding sticks are taken from seedless orange trees in spring or fall and inserted in two-year-old seedling orange trees of ordinary type. When the buds send out shoots the seedlings are cut back so that only the budding portions develop.

CHRIST CHURCH, ALEXANDRIA, VA.

Two momentous decisions were witnessed, at wide intervals, in the shadow of Christ Episcopal church. In the summer of 1774, Washington, surrounded by friends standing in the church doorway, advised renunciation of George III and declared he would fight for the independence of America. On the same spot 87 years later when intimation was made that he would ultimately command the Confederate armies, Robert E. Lee knelt in prayer with heavy heart loyally determined to follow the fortunes of his beloved Virginia.

The Washington pew may still be seen in this historic edifice.

Women Saved Mount Vernon for Country

The nation is indebted to a group of patriotic women who restored Mount Vernon, the home of George Washington, to its original beauty and dignity. The organization, which by its devotion and spirit has been able to accomplish this, is known as the Mount Vernon Ladies' association. It holds its annual council session on the estate.

Back in the fifties the last of the Washington family to possess Mount Vernon, exhausted by the effort not only to keep up the estate, but to endure the strain of entertaining a constant stream of visitors who wished to see the home of their first President, offered it for sale to the state of Virginia and the United States government.

When neither of these public agencies took advantage of the offer Miss Ann Pamela Cunningham appealed to the women of the country to save the home where George Washington found his greatest happiness.

Raise $200,000 Fund.

By her untiring efforts and with the help of Edward Everett and other enthusiastic workers, $200,000 was raised for the purchase of Mount Vernon. Under the charter from the state of Virginia by which the Mount Vernon Ladies' association holds the property, their proprietorship lasts so long as it is fittingly maintained.

It is the purpose of the ladies of this organization to make Mount Vernon exactly as it was in the time of its famous proprietor. To accomplish this they spare no thought, effort or money. They are never extravagant, but they always require that the very best in equipment or service be employed.

Ever-Blooming Flowers.

In the flower beds, outlined by box hedges, are always blooms, from the gaudy tulips of early spring to the equally striking dahlias of fall. Cuttings of box and ivy and seedlings are on sale in order that all who wish may have some growing thing from Mount Vernon in their own gardens.

A great many of the original furnishings of the mansion have been found by these zealous women, and have been placed in their proper setting. Although some furniture which did not belong to George and Martha Washington is used to add to the homelike atmosphere, relics which have not been authenticated as original after careful investigation are no longer accepted or purchased.

It is no effort to imagine the enjoyment that the gracious master and mistress of Mt. Vernon derived from their home. By merely removing the grills at doorways, a perfectly appointed mansion is again ready for occupancy. Every detail is complete. Beds are made with snowy covers over billowy mattresses, books are on the library shelves, a card table and counters await players, piano and flute are there, even knives are in their wooden cases on the buffet in the family dining room, and a clock ticks on the mantel in the banquet hall.

In addition to the ancient, rare and valuable furnishings are the most modern protective systems, by their perfect concealment lending no discordant note. Hot-air heat is piped from a distant furnace, portable electric fixtures are used when necessary, and equipment for fire prevention that is the last word in ingenuity is used.

Danger of Fire Minimized.

Fire is the dread specter of Mount Vernon. Every known precaution against it is employed. Guards, expert by training, fly to their posts at a second's notice, and chemicals and water are available for immediate use. Even a mechanical fire detector is installed.

The ladies of the association, which has made Mount Vernon both what it is today and was in George Washington's time, by their monumental work earn for themselves a reward which in turn inspires them with love of and devotion to their mission.

Each State Has Member.

Each state is entitled to one member in this body. She is known as a vice-regent. Usually there are about thirty-five vice-regents, for as vacancies occur much time and consideration is given to the election of a new member, who receives the honor for life.

She must be a woman who will be in harmony with the ideals of the organization and imbued with the traditions of Mount Vernon, and who, like her associates, will possess the proper esteem for her privileged position and show her devotion by the accomplishment of her duties.

The work of the regent and vice-regents does not end with council session. During the year they distribute literature on Mount Vernon, speak to schools and organizations on the subject, and in every way spread the ennobling traditions of the home of George Washington among the people of America.—Frederic J. Haskin, in Chicago Daily News.

Gone Are the Tales That Once We Read

The Firm of Beadle and Adams, 1862

Gone are the tales that once we read!
And none that come within our ken
May equal those that filled the head
Of many a worthy citizen
Who thrilled with boyish rapture, when,
In retribution stern, but just,
"The deadly rifle spoke—and then Another redskin bit the dust!"
—"Ballade of Dime Novels," by Arthur Guiterman.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

YES, "gone are the tales that once we read"—gone, but not forgotten! For recent years have seen a revival of interest in the "Bang! Bang! Bang!" school of literature which has given the dime novel a place in respectable society that even its most ardent admirers—the juvenile attic, woodshed, or hayloft reading public of a bygone era—would never have believed possible.

What if one of the famous humorists of the day did say, "The dime novel isn't gone—it's bound in a cloth cover now and they're charging two dollars for it"? The fact is that the real dime novel is gone from the place it once held in the heart of American boyhood, but it is gone to an immortality which no one dreamed it would ever have. For these paper-backed thrillers have been graduated to the dignity of "Americana" and "collector's items" and if you, who as a boy saved up spare nickels and dimes to buy "The Unseen Hand," or "The Four Scouts of Waccamaw," or "Roaring Ralph Rockwood, The Reckless Ranger," or "Captain Cool Blade," wanted to get a copy of one of those magnificent yarns now, you'd have to pay all the way from $7.50 to $25 for it.

More than that, the dime novel has recently received another high distinction—for it, which once created heroes, has itself been made the hero of a "full-length biography" by a distinguished American scholar. If you would recapture a thrill of your boyhood days, read Edmund Pearson's "Dime Novels; or, Following an Old Trail in Popular Literature," which Little, Brown and company of Boston published a short time ago!

In the short space of half of the first page in his book, Mr. Pearson summarizes the whole history of the dime novel when he writes:

"Touch but a hair of her head, and by the Lord that made me, I will bespatter that tree with your brains!"

"This is from page ten of the first dime novel. It took twenty to thirty years for such exciting sentences to move up until they became the first words on page one. Then, according to a beloved tradition, the stories opened:

"Bang!"

"Bang!"

"Bang!"

"Three shots rang out on the midnight air!"

"And this progress represents the history of the dime novel."

But the full story of the dime novel requires nearly 300 pages for the telling and its tale is almost as romantic as any revealed in one of the books about which Mr. Pearson writes. Certainly it is exciting to learn that the first dime novel was written by—a woman! For that remark, about "a hair of her head" and the terrible threat which follows immediately after, is a quotation from a thin, little book of 128 pages, six inches high and four inches wide, its covers of saffron paper, bearing the title of "Malaeska: the Indian Wife of the White Hunter," and written by Mrs. A. S. W. Stephens. (Incidentally, as proof of the high estate to which the dime novel has risen in recent years, it may be stated that "Malaeska" was recently reprinted, bound in cloth, and thousands of copies were sold—at $2.50 each!) Of this first dime novel Mr. Pearson writes:

"Something like majesty surrounds the name of Ann Sophia Winterbotham Stephens, author of 'Malaeska.' There was nothing at all about her to coincide with our fancy of the typical writer of dime novels. She was both editor and novelist; her work with the Portland Magazine had led to successive posts in New York, where she had helped edit or establish The Ladies' Companion, The Ladies' World, and other magazines for women, and she had been associated with general periodicals like Graham's and Peterson's. When her works were published in a uniform edition, it was in twenty-three volumes. At the time of the appearance of 'Malaeska,' she was already the author of a number of romances, published at the convention price of $1.50, and bound, decorously, in boards.

"Yet, by strange chance, this lady who must be described by the words so dear to her own time—this lady who was so 'highly respectable'—was to head off a series of books whose general name was a synonym for a literary pestilence."

But if the name of Mrs. Stephens, the author of the first dime novel, is all but forgotten, there are two other names which are not and which are not likely to be. One of them was a native of Ohio, who in 1860 was a school teacher in Trenton, N. J. Edward S. Ellis was his name and in that year for the sum of $75 he handed over to a publishing firm in New York the manuscript of a book which bore the title of "Seth Jones; or, The Captives of the Frontier." It was the first of a long series of such tales which were to come from his pen and it marked a milestone in the history of the dime novel.

But the other name is much more important, for it is one which is synonymous with the name "dime novel." The publishers to whom Ellis delivered his manuscript was I. P. Beadle and company, later to be known as Beadle and Adams, and still later as Beadle and Adams. So the name "Beadle dime novel" came into existence to survive long after both the man and the type of literature which he made popular had passed away.

Although the first name of the firm was I. P. Beadle and company, the head of it was Erastus Flavel Beadle, who is generally credited with being the "father of the dime novel." He was born in the "Cooper country" (Otsego county) of New York in 1821 and learned the printing trade in Cooperstown. Later he opened a printing office in Buffalo and in 1852 issued in that city The Youth's Casket and later The Home Monthly. His brother, Irwin, had been in the news business in Buffalo and had been successful in selling ballads and songs printed on a single sheet of paper. Erastus Beadle published for his brother a number of these songs in a pamphlet, called "The Dime Song Book" and the success of this gave the brothers the idea of issuing other literature for a dime. The result was that they moved to New York in 1858 where they began issuing "Joke Books," "Year Books and Almanacs," "Letter Writers," "Housewives' Manuals" and "Debaters and Books of Fun." They took in as a partner, Robert Adams, a former business associate in Buffalo and the publication of "Malaeska" followed by "Seth Jones" marked the beginning of an enterprise that was almost instantaneously a success.

For nearly 30 years the Beadle firm, under a variety of names representing changes in the partnership, flourished in the face of stiff competition—for the success of the dime novels immediately brought other publishers of this type of literature into the field—and when Erastus Beadle retired in 1889 it was with a comfortable fortune which the little books had built up for him. He died in 1894.

No less interesting than the publishers of these dime novels were the men who wrote them, and Mr. Pearson in his book gives some revealing glimpses of them which show that some had careers almost as thrilling as those of the heroes of whom they wrote. There was Col. Prentiss Ingraham, Beadle's most prolific writer. He fought in the Confederate army, refused to be "reconstructed" when the war was over, went to Mexico where he fought under Juarez, then to Europe where he served in the Austrian army against Prussia in 1866 and in Crete against the Turks. Next he fought in Africa, then served in the Cuban ten years' war for independence as a captain in the Cuban navy and a colonel in the Cuban army. He was captured by the Spaniards and sentenced to death, but escaped before the time set for him to face a firing squad. He then returned to America and was with Buffalo Bill in the West. He is said to have written most of the stories signed by that renowned plainsman, although Col.

Edward Zane Carroll Judson, who wrote under the name of "Ned Buntline," did the most, through his dime novels and his stage plays, to make Cody famous.

Judson had served in the United States navy and fought seven duels with other midshipmen who refused to mess with him because he had been a common sailor. In the Civil war he was chief of scouts with the Indians and had a variety of other adventures, both East and West. Another genuine frontier character was Maj. Sam S. Hall or "Buckskin Sam" who made his home in the East, but who "occasionally showed his virile western manhood by going on a shooting rampage at his home in Wilmington, Del." Then there was James Fenimore Cooper Adams, or "Bruin" Adams, who in "Old Grizzly, the Bear Tamer," wrote the adventures of his uncle, James Capon Adams, who was accustomed to go about the frontier country mounted on a large grizzly bear.

Next to Colonel Ingraham in the matter of prolific work was Thomas Chalmers Harbaugh, who died in the poorhouse in Ohio only a few years ago and who was referred to at the time as the "Dime Novel King"—a tribute to his versatility rather than to the wealth which he accumulated from his literary labors. He wrote under other names than his own and is credited with having written some of the "Old Cap Colliers" and some of the "Nick Carters" when the popularity of frontier history began to wane and detective fiction took its place between the covers of the dime novels.

"Old Cap Collier" tales were written by a number of writers, but all of them knew how to pack every page with a dozen thrills. For instance, Mr. Pearson makes this compilation of the activities of "Old Cap" in one book: "Gets in a fight (plain), 5 times; fights four or five men at once, 7 times; is shot or attacked with knives or bludgeons, 12 times; is blown up, once; escapes poisoning, once; is buried alive once; is caught in a steel trap disguised as a chair, once; number of men he beats 'to a jelly,' 2; number of men he hurls through the air (one of them, a very large man, he threw 30 feet), 21; number of men he would have hurled through the air, but refrained, for fear of making a noise, and instead choked him until he was black in the face, 1."

Nearly as famous as "Old Cap Collier" was "Old Sleuth." Then there was "Nick Carter"—but here we begin to run into the "nickel libraries." From "Nick Carter" it was but a step to "Frank Merriwell" and these come under a section which Mr. Pearson heads, "The Menace of Respectability." In it he says: "When did dime novels commence to doddle down the hill into old age? When did their arteries harden and respectability set in? When did they cease to be a moral menace and become a literary curiosity? . . .

"Different dates might be set. . . . It could be in 1922 when Dr. Frank O'Brien's gift to the New York public library of fourteen hundred Beadles and other publications was boldly put on show. Men still young who gazed at this exhibition could easily remember when the librarian of a public library would show more cordiality to a cobra de capello within his doors than to a dime novel. When another large set of them toured the country and were exhibited in libraries everywhere, there was the end of an old superstition. An ancient bugaboo had perished."

How to Escape FLU

1 Avoid so far as possible the places where flu germs are most likely to be spread; overcrowded cars and public meeting places; overheated, stuffy rooms.

2 Be careful of close contact with others and beware of all coughers and sneezers; breathe through the nose, get fresh air, but avoid drafts or chilling.

3 Get lots of rest. Eat plenty of citrus fruits. Keep the bowels open. Take extra precaution to keep in good physical condition, so your system will have high resistance against germs.

4 Above all, avoid catching colds. They lower your resistance to the flu germ. Ward them off. At the first sign of any cold, take Bayer Aspirin and remain indoors if possible until your cold is gone. If you have a sore throat, dissolve some Bayer Aspirin tablets in water and gargle; this will relieve the soreness and reduce the inflammation.

5 If you have any reason to suspect even a touch of flu, call your doctor at once.

A BOOST

The Orland Park Edition of the News-Bulletin, has been given a new head and is now known as THE ORLAND PARK HERALD. The following boosting editorial appeared in the Lemont Optimist-News last week, on the new paper:

"Orland Park, that up-and-coming community to our East, now has its own newspaper. The first issue appeared last week, and is a very creditable production, issued by Wm. Semmler, who has been publishing the Mokena News-Bulletin for some years.

About two years ago Mr. Semmler began to publish a Tinley Park edition and things have now reached the place where Orland seems to need a paper.

"We congratulate friend Bill on his venture into this new field, and wish him the best of luck. He publishes mighty good papers for the other communities he serves, and there is no reason to think that it will be any different in Orland.

"The Lockport Leader has been sold to a couple of experienced newspaper men, who issued their first paper last week. The Leader suspended publication some months ago, and the people of that town have been without a paper since that time. We wish our new neighbors success in their venture, and do not see any reason why they should not make a good thing of it, while at the same time doing a good thing for their adopted community."

Thanks, brother Williams. We shall always try to live up to the fine things you have said about our papers and editor.

Kidnapped Palos Park Boy, Latter Freed

A kidnaping plot in which Clifford Cannon, 16 years old, Willow Springs, was to be held for ransom, was abandoned by two men Monday after they had taken the boy from Willow Springs to a point near Dellwood Park.

Clifford, who starts the furnace fire every morning in the Palos Park school was on his way to his morning task when he was stopped along the road by two men in a blue coupe. They ordered him to get in the car, and started questioning him as they drove toward Joliet.

The questions were all pertaining to the amount of money that could be raised by Clifford's folks. The lad was evasive in his answers and the pair grew rough with him before they gave up the task of obtaining information.

Evidently deciding they had obtained the wrong boy, or thinking the venture too difficult, the men abandoned their kidnaping attempt and released Cannon near Dellwood Park. The boy made his way to the home of a friend, Richard Wilda, on the Mound Road.

He described his kidnapers as being young, between 18 and 20 years old, and weighing about 130 pounds. Both were well dressed, wearing dark suits. One had a hat and the other was bareheaded, he said.

ODE TO A DOG—By Kipling

When the body that lived at your single will,
When the whimper of welcome is stilled (how still)
When the spirit that answered your every mood
Is gone—wherever it goes—for good
Then you will find: how much you care
But—you've given your heart to a dog to tear.

Great Writer's Idea

Solomon's proverbs, I think, have admitted to say that as the sore palate findeth grit, so an uneasy conscience beareth innuendoes.—George Eliot
